My Little Grandmother

By Jayden Chan

Friday, 11th December 20xx

My grandmother was a little girl fifty years ago. She told me that there was no MTR in Hong Kong. She went to school by tram. Everybody dropped the fare when they got off the tram. They didn't have an Octopus card.

My grandmother was an outgoing girl when she was young. She liked playing rubber strings and bean bags with her friend during recess. They even made the rubber strings and bean bags in their free time. They divided the work into different parts and combined them when they met at school. They played hide and seek and hopscotch with the boys occasionally. My grandmother also joined the volleyball team at school. She needed to train three times a week. She was very sporty when she was a teenager. She can't understand why the juvenile is addicted to electronic games. She also asked my brother and me not to just sit there to play with our smartphones. She convinced us to have regular exercise.

Grandmother still writes letters to her friend who lives in Canada. We tried to teach her to use email to communicate with her friend. She refused to use such kind of instant communication. My grandmother likes talking on the phone with my aunt every day. She thinks that mobile phone is a brilliant invention in this century.
